

Kenvale College really means "Humanity"

Last October, Kenvale College of Tourism and Hospitality Management organized and participated in a service project in Wagga Wagga's south. The aim of the project was to provide craft, sporting and cooking activities to children around the Tolland area where crime rates are third highest in New South Wales.

"We aimed to give the children something to do during the holidays as well as equipping them with skills which hopefully they can use later on in their homes",

Carmen Pavia, Project Leader and Assistant Head of Studies at Kenvale College.

The project was run by young volunteers from Wagga and Sydney. The team was made up of 12 young women who chose to spend a week of their holidays doing something worthwhile for others.

The cooking program included pancakes, fried rice, Bircher muesli, beef stir fry, and chicken wings.

"We tried to promote healthy cooking skills in an outdoor setting. All the cooking was done in the BBQ!"
Maggie Boneham,
Project Participant.

The project was sponsored by Nestle, and Unilever which provided cooking utensils for the lessons. Also, St. Vincent's Society in Wagga provided the food ingredients needed for the cooking program.

"I found Wagga Service Project really rewarding. Even though we did not get a chance to solve any of the many social problems by which the kids are surrounded, we gave them a chance just to be kids; that is definitely worthwhile!"; Tahni Pyke, Project Participant.
